A Recipe For A Snowy Setting

Take a sprinkle of icy powder, and let a frigid, fierce wind spread it across the highest branches of the trees.

Cover the windowsills and edge of the roof with icicles, graceful in their glacial beauty.

Peer through the window at the blazing hearth, then trudge away, knowing you can't get inside.

Hear furious wolves howling as they see a sneaky Siberian tiger stealing their prey.

Feel the ground tremble as a brown bear snores in an underground cave . . . beneath your feet!

See the frozen stream, which only a month ago had bubbled merrily and was a deep aqua blue.

Observe a musk deer nibble the frozen lichen on a tree trunk and scramble back, surprised at the cold.

Watch the sun slip just below the horizon, and hear the eagle owl call to the snowy ones.

Follow the clawed prints in the snow that were made by the wolves; they go where they please.

Soft snow starts stacking on the bare brown trees so you snuggle up in a delicate snowdrift, thinking.

Take the dark and stormy girl and hide her away.
